Ecorios

Uncompromising sustainability. Where does sustainability begin, where does sustainability end? Due to the lack of a uniform definition, countless definitions of terms circulate that offer plenty of room for discussion. In order to find out whether a company produces and sells sustainable textiles, it must be committed and willing to disclose its own organisational structures and thus create internal and external transparency. Only if the entire textile chain is sustainable, starting with the raw material and carried through to the end of the value chain, which in the best case represents a beginning again, can we speak of uncompromising sustainability. Ecorios wants to point out challenges and grievances in the textile chain and seek answers to unsettled questions of sustainability. Current topics should be discussed and an awareness of the society for a fair handling of social and natural resources in the textile industry should be created. The vision to establish sustainable value creation and awareness in the future of the textile industry through the joint exchange of ideas, that is why we created Ecorios as an digital sustainable tool.
